ABSTRACT

Illegal migration in its present form is one of the main threats to the internal security and also to the external borders. Migration, in its current form is not an issue of the states at the external border that are choked by this phenomenon, but it is a problem of the entire Europe. The management of the borders is in the interest of all member states and by their control it is ensured an effective prevention and combating of crime in the sphere of the organized crime and even the removal of the threats addressed to the internal security of all the states. The states of transit are suffocated by the large number of migrants, raising many tensions between the member states and economic problems due to the blocking of cities, railways and roads. Therefore it is necessary that common policies are adopted based on a consensus and in an as fast as possible time.
