ABSTRACT

The internal affairs system is a complex system both by scope and by the implications it has. With the help of institutions and bodies it comprises, public order is ensured and to a certain extent national security, as well. In order for the activities carried out in this complex system to reach their purpose it is necessary to carry out a permanent analysis. With the help of these analyses we can identify the elements which must be improved or reformed. The article aims to identify the main instruments which can be used for the realization of an analysis, whether it is about the identification of the external environment, or the internal and external environment in view of the realization of strategies and instruments used in case of performance of a risk analysis. Thus, the article presents instruments such as PEST analysis by which we can make a radiography of the external environment of the system, SWOT analysis which identifies elements relating to the external environment such as threats and opportunities and elements specific to the internal environment, such as strengths and weaknesses.
