ABSTRACT

Population migration is a phenomenon known since the 5th and 4th centuries B.C. towards Gaul, Britain, Italy, Greece, Asia Minor from the West to the South and East, and which is still found today, in the 21st century, but under new forms and under different intensities, depending on historical stages. People will always tend to go to a better place and as long as there are socio-economic discrepancies between the countries of the world, this phenomenon will continue to exist.

Because of the large number of migrants who want to reach by any means developed countries, which members of the European Union, criminal networks emerged which, for substantial profits, conduct these illegal border crossings for as many people as possible.
