ABSTRACT

This article tackles the elements specific to the organizational management approached at the level of forensic structures. The elements of organizational culture can be found in the life of every individual. Regardless the performed activity - housework or activities specific to the job, regardless the activity environment, the elements specific to the organization influence our daily work, even if we speak either about the family environment, or about the professional one. The specific elements of the organizational management should be considered in any institution, including the forensic ones. The organization and its rules are important because allow us to achieve some objectives, which individually would be impossible to be reached. Article deals with the general elements of organizational management applied to the specificities of forensic structures. Such an approach is necessary because the forensic structures are entities with a special character of the Romanian Police. Many times, activities performing, either we speak about investigation at the crime scene or we speak about expertise, assume the teamwork. The lack of the cooperation based on the principles of organizational management would make the forensic activities to be blocked many times.
