ABSTRACT

Terrorism is one of the greatest dangers people are facing in this century. The terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center in New York on 11 September 2000 ranked among the world's greatest disasters, and one of similar proportions would have the operation near Stade de France on 3 July 2016, which French police managed to dismantle. The measures taken by the Great Powers in view of anticipating, discovering, preventing and combating terrorism, which implies major security risks, both inside the state and abroad, are also the primary concern of the other states, which have engaged in a continuing struggle against terrorism, adapting their strategies to the new tendencies in organized crime and preventing a rise in terrorist manifestations. Good relations between specialized services in the field of counterterrorism must result in a permanent exchange of information and the filing of significant data for the purposes of finding out the optimal response and counteractions, for evolving an efficient plan of identification, assessment, prediction, prevention and combating of possible terrorist acts in various parts of the world.
