Diversity is a crucial element in modern organizations to ensure public order and social development. In this sense, the debate about diversity in European and national societies is a particularly current topic. The article seeks to address the involvement of organizations in the non-discrimination issues but also the approach of EU countries in terms of diversity. Even if in the European Union there is a rich legislation on the issue of discrimination, the adaptation and implementation of specialized and dynamic strategies to promote diversity, non-discrimination and equal opportunities for all is absolutely required.
