Content description:

This article deals with the illegal migration, a phenomenon that has always been present. At the base of the desire of legal or illegal migration have always been a number of contributing factors, some of them have remained the same, others are specific to the period in which we live. In the category of determining factors we may mention the economic situation of the state source, demographic situation, social status, state of existing armed conflict at the level of the source state as well as the existence of some transnational networks of human trafficking. This scourge has numerous implications both on the illegal immigrant and on the destination state. This article aims to identify these consequences as well as certain ways to reduce or even stop the illegal activities.
